PREFACE

Almost all research takes place in quiet studies, lonely laboratories, great libraries, and during almost incomprehensible experiments. In order for the results of this work to be of benefit for mankind, a forum is required where they can be presented to interested parties. Publishing these results is the most common such forum. New educational institutions slowly cultivate their own research staff which organizes research work, seminars, and conferences, and promotes talented and hard-working youth.

A similar process is under way here in Chelm for several years now, where a state university is working in the field of science, technology, and the humanities. Keeping in mind the proper functioning and development of the local educational environment, the governing body of this university has decided to undertake the publishing of research publications in the specific fields relevant to the university.
